A cupuncture for Musculoskeletal Injury introduces the etiology and pathogenesis, diagnostic highlights, syndrome differentiation and treatment, selection of acupuncture points and therapeutic methods for 69 kinds of musculoskeletal injuries with commentary, acupuncture points and clinical explanations. It also records the manipulation and needling technique as well as the course of treatment. The final part describes the therapeutic efficacy, treatment time for the disease and modifications. It not only introduces empirical therapeutic schemes of acupuncture and moxibustion, but also discusses the external application of Chinese medicinals for the diseases that do not respond well to acupuncture therapy. It is a real pragmatic reference book for clinical acupuncturists.

About the Author

Lu Shao-jie is an attending physician and a director of the Department of Acupuncture and Moxibustion of the Peoples Hospital in Xiangyang District, Hubei Province. Born in an experienced TCM doctor's family, he has been deeply influenced by the favourable medical environment. He has consulted 12 renowned acupuncturists in Hubei province, and researched numerous books on acupuncture and moxibustion. After extensive clinical practice, he is able to treat more than 300 diseases, especially cerebrovascular diseases and sequelae. In addition, he has summed up many effective therapeutic regimens for nervous system disorders, hyperostosis and musculoskeletal injury.
